

SWEATING GOLD COINS.

No More Cause for Alarm than at Any Other Time.

The report has reached this city from New York to the effect that several large banks in that city do business with California have been troubled of late at many of the light-weight $20 gold pieces which are found in almost every shipment of gold that comes from that state. To such a point has the trouble grown, it is said, that the opinion has been reached that the coins are subjected to a sweating process by electricity, which will extract as much as 75 cents or $1 from each $20 gold piece without materially affecting the face of the coin.

At the treasury a Star reporter was told that the matter had not yet been officially called to the attention of the department, and that nothing more was known about it than what has appeared in the news papers. There is no reason to suppose that the trouble was any worse now than usual. This practice of "sweating" gold coins goes on all the time to a greater or less extent. In California where gold pieces are coined in large quantities, there is no sweating. The sweat is a light-weight coin not noticed so quickly. The opinion prevails at the treasury that the matter has attracted attention just now simply because a lot of gold has come east and has been subjected to a closer examination than it has ever had before since it left the mint.
